

Chapter 1. Field Visit

Q.1. Make a report on your field visit.

Ans.

The field visit is one of the important methods of geographical study. During our field visit, we selected a nearby area and studied its geographical features. Before the visit, we prepared a questionnaire and collected the required materials such as maps, notebooks, measuring tape and camera.

During the visit, we observed the landforms, drainage, vegetation, roads, transport facilities, occupations of the people and other physical and human features. We interacted with local people and collected useful information related to the area.

After returning from the field visit, we organised the collected information, prepared maps and charts, analysed our observations and wrote the report. The field visit helped us understand geographical concepts practically and increased our observation and analytical skills.
